Friend --

Congratulations to Governor Ige on his selection as Honolulu Magazine's 2015 Islanders of the Year: Politics. You can read the entire article at the Honolulu Magazine website. Among the highlights:

"In his first year, Ige, 59, also staked out key positions that part from conventional play-it-safe politics: he supported the construction of the billion-plus-dollar Thirty Meter Telescope despite vocal protests; he opposed the proposal to merge Hawaiian Electric with Florida-based NextEra Energy (he says: 'It's really not in the best interest of the people of Hawai'i'); and he urged spending more money on the UH Cancer Center than on the university's popular sports programs."

"A graduate of Hawai'i public schools, he's aware of the toll of 100-degree classrooms. As a parent of three young adults, his priorities are more pragmatic than poetic. 'It's about leadership and trying to provide direction in responding to the biggest needs: housing, cost of living, the fact that our young people have no way of choosing to live here."

The team is proud of David's accomplishments and expect even more progress in the coming years!
