Aloha Friend,

Today, one month after the devastating Parkland school shooting, Governor Ige joined students at Pearl City High School and across the nation in the 17-minute walkout to protest gun violence and urge Congress to pass stricter gun laws.

As the first governor in the nation to take on the NRA, Governor Ige stands in solidarity with the students, teachers, and administrators across the country who are raising their voices, standing up, and walking out of their classrooms and into the streets to push Congress to act now.

Under Governor Ige's leadership, Hawai'i is leading the nation with responsible, common-sense gun laws. We have some of the strictest gun control laws in the country, requiring more rigorous FBI background checks for gun owners to keep guns out of the hands of stalkers, sexual harassers, and the mentally ill.

But, we need national gun reform. All American children, not just those in Hawai'i, deserve schools that are safe from gun violence.

We are simply asking for a common-sense solution to a fixable problem -- our children's voices need to be heard and taken seriously, and Governor Ige is proud to join these brave young students in today's walkout.

Mahalo,
